

Bond Update:

As we approach the middle of fall, the current Bond projects are progressing well.

The work at Fern Ridge Middle School is complete and the students and staff have settled in to the school year.

The new additions at Veneta Elementary School have taken shape and the project is on schedule to be complete before the Winter Break. The work focuses on completing the interior finishes and making preparations to move into the new areas.

The site work for the new Elmira Elementary School building got underway in late October. The project is planned to take one year to complete with construction of the building beginning in mid-December.

At Elmira High School the installation of the new field lights is complete, which has greatly improved the viewing of activities on the field and increased both the safety of the students and security of the campus. The new auxiliary gym project for the high school has begun its design phase. Staff is working with the design team to begin to put together preliminary sketches of the project.
